

The UMass Dartmouth Portuguese undergraduate and graduate degrees offer students several pathways. Spoken by more than 270 million people in eight countries on four continents, Portuguese is the third most widely spoken European language, right after English and Spanish, and it's the sixth most used language in the world. UMass Dartmouth sits in the heart of a region boasting large populations of Brazilian, Cape Verdean, and Portuguese immigrants in the United States. Such an environment is a unique opportunity to explore Portuguese language and literature as students immerse themselves in the Portuguese language-speaking world.

Skills Developed

The Portuguese (POR) department provides a solid foundation in the Portuguese language and on the literatures and cultures of the Portuguese-speaking world. Students will learn skills in literary theory, cultural analysis and linguistics along with practical skills in academic writing, research methodology, critical thinking, translation, and pedagogy.

Curriculum overview

Students who choose this major will study 120 credits, 30 of which will be in courses strictly related to Portuguese. As a minor, 18 credit hours of Portuguese academics will be completed. Strong communication skills will be developed through writing and speaking, analyzing texts from literary periods in Portugal, Brazil, and Lusophone Africa. History and contemporary realities are also a huge part of the degree experience.
